Michelman & Robinson LLP's Construction Law Department understands that construction related disputes can devastate a business. Our team, which has combined over fifty years of counseling and litigation experience in the construction industry, expertly resolves the most complex business and litigation issues.

We handle virtually all aspects of public and private construction law and litigation for a diverse array of clients, including general contractors and sub-contractors, architects, engineers, developers, owners, lenders and suppliers. We regularly advise our clients in matters involving contract preparation, negotiation and analysis; lien, bond and insurance claims; bid disputes and other public contracting matters; delay and disruptions claims, changes and other equitable adjustment claims; construction defects; payment and collection issues; professional negligence; mediation, arbitration, litigation and appeals.

In the construction defect field, we litigate a range of disputes that affect commercial, condominium, residential and industrial buildings such as defense of claims and allegations by homeowners, homeowner's associations, contractors and other corporate entities. Our experienced team consistently obtains victories in suits involving commercial property general liability claims, as well as wrongful eviction, slip and fall, lack of security; cleaning service claims; and change, order and delay construction claims, to name a few.

Our attorneys are active members of California's construction industry and frequent contributors to construction industry publications, including the Western Council Connection and the Construction Law Anthology. We also conduct specialized construction claims training programs for the State of California Department of General Services, the California State University, and numerous other governmental and private organizations.
